Twenty men, firing promiseuously filled the street at Ninth avenue and Forty-sixth street when that battle broke out. They were the members of the Hell's Kitchen and the Stryker's Farm bands.

Thrown Into Panic.

Hundreds of the dwellers in tenements there fled in terror when the battle began, and several women and children narrowly escaped the flying lead. The rattle of pistols was heard in the West Forty-seventh street police station, just a block away, and reserves were hustled around the corner. Before they arrived, however, the feud was over, the gunmen had scattered, and only blood on the paving stones showed that some of the bullets went home.

The second outbreak came at a dance in Abingdon square, a mile lower down the West Side. In the hall the "Hudson Dusters," a notorious band, were entertaining, when the Gophers, a rival crowd, sent a spy into the hall Sherwood-Walter McDonnell et ux, to John to see what was going on. Later he was taken to the New York Hospital. There, although he was 1 130 dying, Hillock refused to say a word of who shot him down, remaining true to the ethics of the New York gunfighter.

When police backed two wagons up to the doors of the dance hall no one could be found who knew anything of a man being shot. An empty pistol, freshly discharged, was found in a hall, and twenty-five of the gangsters and their women were taken to the police station. Today they are being "sweated" for a clue to the crime.
